Moving to a strengths-based recruitment model usually requires taking an honest assessment of the high performers in the workplace and determining the strengths and values that motivate them. With that analysis, you can develop job descriptions that are strength focused, with less emphasis on competencies.

How to: Use Strengths-Based Recruitment to Improve Your ...

A strengths-based recruitment approach, however, does just that. It hones in on a person ' s motivations, the reasons why they do what they do. Because why they do what they do will determine their behaviour in the role. And that will determine the impact they will have in the role, the outcomes they will deliver.

Strengths-Based Recruitment and Development sets out a relatively new approach adopted by organizations to improve their performance, customer satisfaction and brand reputation.

Traditionally most organizations have hired their people on the basis of what they can do and have done in the past, using competency-based approaches, rather than what they are naturally good at and love doing.
